Introduction

KOMODO NATIONAL PARK

Real dragons spurt no fire, have no need to fly and cast no magic spells. But still, one look from them might make you speechless. The Komodo Dragon (Varanus Komodoensis) is an endangered species which can only be found in the Komodo National Park (KNP) in East Nusa Tenggara (NTT). Because of the unique and rare nature of this animal, KNP was declared as a World Heritage Site by UNESCO in 1986.

The park includes three major islands: Komodo, Rinca, and Padar, and many smaller islands together totalling 603 km² of land. The total size of Komodo National Park is presently 1,817 km². At least 2500 Komodos live in this area.

Komodo National Park has a rich and amazing underwater sea biota. Divers claim that Komodo waters are one of the best diving sites in the world. It has fascinating underwater scenery. You can find 385 species of beautiful corals, mangrove forests, and seaweeds as a home for thousands of fish species, 70 types of sponges, 10 types of dolphins, 6 types of whales, green turtles and various types of sharks and stingrays. Or you can do some diving activities on Komodo Island.
